

Julia's has a passion painting landscapes. She paints while on site or from an image. A photo allows her time to decide the main focus and interpret the image for the viewer to imagine the sense of that moment in time.

Plein Aire (outside) painting, is more challenging. An artist must decide what paint, where to set up their easel, how to interpret the scene and remember it as the image changes with the light and weather. Julia blocks in shapes, adding detail while developing a feeling, a story. Completing the work in her studio.

When asked why she paints, Julia responded, "Art is like oxygen, you can't live without it." Julia paints works in oils and pastels.
